Geographical Distribution of Judges To Be More in Conformity with Original Plan, President Says, Little or No Opposition to Parker Expected

By The Associated Press
WASHINGTON, March 22.—The nomination of Judge John J. Parker of North Carolina as an associate justice of the supreme court is expected to be approved by the senate with a minimum of opposition.

This view was expressed today after study of the situation which found few signs of dissatisfaction and several prominent factors in support of the nomination.

Chief among the latter was the favorable attitude of the southern Democratic Party, which is a Republican but the Democrats from his seat on have a high regard for his qualifications and are pleased that the South has been recognized and in addition Republican regulars are expected to support the president's selection.

West Only Danger Point

Thus it was pointed out, while opposition might develop is expected to be confined to the independent Republicans from the west and it is by no means certain that objection will come from that quarter.

The independent are a strong group in the Senate and North and Southern leaders of the group are waiting for information as to the president's intention as to the nomination.

Combine, Merge Keynote of American Industry, Will Says, and They Don't Care What Businesses Hook Up

Being the Chain Stores
As Competing for Postal Trade.

WILL ROGERS

A little yapping over the other night and as was principally over the States, and having been I knew that one of the things that was agitating was the Chain Stores. My own State of Oklahoma posed quite a furor. Well I addressed I got a lot of Telegrams, lots of them that did not bear it but knew what it was. Well I sent it to them so the best way to do would be to let them see it. It really however is a lot of junk, but it might be. I can't and didn't. That's what the press is only bring these and let them fix em. Here it is. I am working Standard Oil of Indiana or later we will all be em or for somebody else. We are living in an America and Combines.

Business is not doing good with something and sell. The poor little fellow combine with anything but a case he is going to be generally. But Big business with another thing good and both do nothing. But its one of the mental of the American people. They must be great. They don't will be financially but that the stock will go up and they think about never dividends.

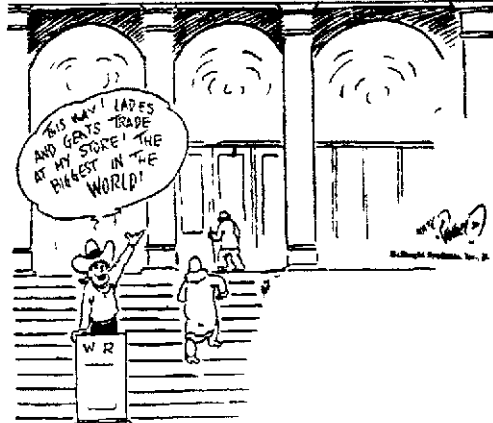

They Combine Anything. I think that it was only to some nature that could it now its liable to be the Railroad and Menace Vacuum Powder. Blue Jaws are just as liable to go to a huddle with Whirl as it is to join pedal with Allen's footcase. I don't not only look over but Frigid Air Ice boxes. A Bulk car got to do the small car in its own right. What's a Cadillac with Whips your mill. I don't know what Wall Street I know that the stock went I know that the stock went I know that the stock went.

W. S. Rogers will wheel in (in) everything. I know that the stock went I know that the stock went I know that the stock went. I know that the stock went I know that the stock went I know that the stock went. I know that the stock went I know that the stock went I know that the stock went.

It Does Look Bad. I don't look like the day of the last Officeholder is over and nothing is over little News in Little Grocer Butcher.

every thing. Why Sears Roebuck have got up a store on every corner. You can't go 100 miles out of their clutches. They will sell you a Mowing Machine Standard Oil stock. I. S. B. ride a Farm, Town lots Ice Cream soda a house all put together like blocks. If you want meat you go to the Butcher. If you want to sell it to a man and throw in a load of mittens. I depend on Druggists just as I depend on their own charge accounts and their Aspirin Tablets and Tettero sandwiches and put and join the Navy. For the chain will do from thinner than this ever could. They buy their Cola in the Tankers. They can serve your wife a case of Gin and you a Ford. I don't know what you are over the counter with your Apple Pie. If you don't wiggle or Owner of my self time will buy you cheaper than your local Merchant can market with the bottle. They even let the poor old Bootlegger on the run they can sell Oklahoma City people Jamaica Ginger cheaper than the Bootlegger can square the Author.

And the Ministers business is not of Julius Rosenwald an old friend of mine wanted me to go in of their Stores and do a little preaching for em. They figured the people would buy something before they got out if it was nothing but an old Testament. They figure that they can deliver your salvation cheaper than you can get it elsewhere, and a better grade. Big Business has all been corralled the big Preachers. So in a year or so we will all be working for Jodel and Heuer Incorporated. I. S. Steel and T. P. House Limited. Chicago and Dupont Powder consolidated.

We will either be doing that or else. Or else what. Or else not eating regular. Try to Change It. I don't know what's going to be done about it. One time the Government split up the Standard Oil into 31 parts and in two years each one of the 31 was bigger than the original. So it looked like they just thrived on being split up. There is not much you can do about it unless you could change human nature. Americans are the greatest people in the world.

Government Once Tried Splitting Them Up, but Action Failed.

Actual Road Tests Prove

Keeps Out Hard Carbon Increases Power.. Minimizes Knocking

Each of these tests was made under exactly the same conditions.

PISTON No. 1 was taken from a Ford engine after a run of 1,000 miles. A compounded oil was used.

PISTON No. 2 was taken from the same engine, same cylinder, after a run of 1,000 miles, and a different compounded oil was used.

PISTON No. 3 was taken from the same engine, same cylinder, after a run of 1,000 miles, and a third compounded oil was used.

Here's how SUNOCO, the 100% distilled oil, performed in this test:

You can see the heavy carbon deposits on the pistons 1, 2 and 3 after running only 1,000 miles—hard, flinty carbon, difficult to remove.

Piston No. 4 was taken from the same Ford engine, same cylinder, after running 5,000 miles (5 times as far). SUNOCO Motor Oil was used. After the test there was only a little soft, harmless soot which could be wiped off easily with a rag—a characteristic SUNOCO performance.

PISTON No. 4

BURNING TEST shows why SUNOCO, the 100% DISTILLED OIL, LEAVES NO HARD CARBON

When compounded paraffine oils containing cylinder stock were subjected in our laboratory tests to high heat, the light oil burned off and the sticky cylinder stock remained. In an automobile engine this sticky deposit collects gasoline soot and dust brought in through the breather pipe. Then it is baked into hard carbon.

SUNOCO Motor Oil, when subjected to high heat, does not leave a sticky residue, because it contains no "cylinder stock." It is not a mixture of a light oil and "cylinder stock." That's why it does not separate; cannot form a sticky deposit on the pistons or cylinder head; and will not form hard carbon.

Proper Greasing is as vital to the life of a car as the proper motor oil. SUNOCO Greases are 100% lubricants

MODERNIZE HOME IS CRY

Material Sale Offers Opportunity To Bring House Up to Date.

At the beginning of the second week of its sale, the Leslie Adams Lumber & Coal Co. stresses the importance of taking this opportunity to modernize the home at a lower cost. For two weeks this lumber company is offering lumber and mill work for a purpose of great savings. The plan is to thus encourage more customers to take advantage of the services rendered by this Silver at lumber yard. The sale opened last Monday and will close Monday, March 31.

Have you thought about your home? If so, you need move. At a very modest expenditure you may enjoy the added comfort of a bedroom for baby, the added healthfulness of a sun parlor, the added beauty of a library or the added luxury of a breakfast nook. Whatever the addition it will be designed to harmonize architecturally with the rest of the house.

With a little careful planning and the attic into a pleasant little study or a quiet guestroom. There are numerous interesting possibilities of which the Leslie Adams Lumber & Coal Co. would be pleased to tell you. Coming as it does right when people are thinking about their home needs for this spring and summer, the sale announced by the Leslie Adams Lumber & Coal Co. has met a hearty response. The man in Marion who desires to see if he will find his Shingles greatly reduced, it will find that he can get all the necessary lumber and mill work at a remarkable saving. If he wants screens or screen doors, these are both included in this money-saving sale. If he desires to build a porch, he can buy all his lumber at a low price.

The Leslie Adams Lumber & Coal Co. is offering this sale at 514 Silver St., a well-known lumber yard and an all-around service. Last year the company celebrated the completion of its 10th year in business. In its 10th year of operation, it has built up a reputation of being the place to buy lumber and mill work.

at a very nominal cost the home you were so proud of a few years ago may be modernized completely inside and out. The cost of these modern improvements as compared to the increased value of your property is really a trifling matter.

This is the day of underground rights and air rights. Space has value, and is not to be wasted. If your basement is only an exaggerated furnace room, it wants remodeling. It holds, potentially, a clubby den for father, a playroom for the children, a sewing and utility room for mother, or even a small gymnasium. The back porch, also, may be made into a delightful sun parlor at a very small outlay of cash.

Once, the world looked to the attic only for its great pictures, poems, novels and music. Now it is fast, valuable and sensible to remodel

Above is a view of the Leslie Adams Lumber & Coal Co. yards on Silver at where a special sale of lumber and mill work is now in progress. The sale opened last Monday and will close Monday, March 31.

OBTAINS CONTRACT FOR NEW RESIDENCE

Arden Millisor, Local Builder, To Construct New Thomas H. Clark Home.

The announcement made yesterday that the contract for the new residence for Thomas H. Clark to be built on Mt. Vernon as would be awarded to Arden J. Millisor adds another to a series of fine new homes which have been built by this popular home contractor.

Mr. Millisor is very optimistic as to the outlook for this spring and summer. Work on the Clark home is to start at once. Among the homes which Mr. Millisor has recently completed are the residence of J. B. Towner on Mt. Vernon as the Millisor home corner of King and Wesley rd. the D. J. Shelton home on Highland Pike and the E. B. Taylor home south of the city. In addition to these he has several other excellent homes in prospect for building this spring. One home in Vernon Heights is practically completed and will be ready for occupancy May 1.

Building Permits Amount to $8,500

Four building permits for construction work expected to cost approximately $8,250 were issued during the last week by City Clerk Sylvester Jarkko. Three were for garages, ranging in estimated value from $500 to $1,500 and one was for an $8,000 dwelling.

EYES IMPORTANT

Too few people realize the importance of visual protection, says Dr. W. A. Dennis, local optometrist. The eye is a delicate instrument—sensitive to changing conditions of light—easily strained and injured by overwork and lack of care. Headaches, nervousness, irritability, lack of energy, tightness and hardness of the facial features are frequently caused by visual exhaustion. It is important that you care for your eyes—as you care for the rest of your body—and see that your sight is given every attention possible.

A Future Businessman

DIVERS in a local restaurant got a modified check with the appearance of the other evening of a youthful newsboy. His get up one knew was of his own selection and he no doubt, out of the corner of his eye, enjoyed the attention he was receiving. His hat would be fine for him 20 years hence and his boots might fit in another three years. His sweater was tucked into his overalls and out of the hip pocket hung a string of twine. He cried his wares in a pleasing voice and needless to say did some business.

A STORY OF LOVE AND LIFE IN HOLLYWOOD

BY SIDNEY HERSHMAN SMALL

He Talked, but He Could Deliver

CHAPTER 36
"I talked to our own over the phone... not about that, but gave them the idea that there was something about the business, I'll get in touch with him again, and I don't think Blake will try to pull the same thing twice. There's a limit to everything. We'll be just as tough."

John Andrew put his hand on Anne's arm; her own hand seized his, pressed it nervously a moment, and then dropped to her skirt, laid "John" down, and kept it there. "John" was a big, heavy-set man, little more than a bluff, and he was not to be trifled with.

"How can I?" she asked. "It's Blake's attorney trying to get all the money from me."

John Andrew said nothing, but followed her arm with his hand until he reached her fingers; these, cold, he held firmly.

She sat with her head a little bowed.

Long before this Kellogg's first weakness at the situation—his first weakness—had disappeared. Now it returned many fold. He frowned in a puzzled way, he had not, and never had, been concerned with questions of right and wrong, since he knew his own innocence; even at his darkest moments. But now he saw that something was beating from Anne that which she might never regain, or, if she did find it again, which would leave her different than before.

"Don't try to think about anything," he said in her ear.

Anne, he saw, was worn out with thinking; she nodded, with a sort of meek obedience very unlike her, and Kellogg wanted desperately to rush into words... which, now, for the time, she could never believe. Yet he was searching for words which might comfort when she began to speak.

"I know... in New York," she said, as much to herself as to the man. "When you borrowed money... to pay the landlady. I knew it... on the train. I've always known it. And I love you anyway. I love you enough to be unhappy with you. And too much to see you unhappy. I—"

"I'm not unhappy," said John Andrew softly.

Her cloak of restraint whirled from her, and the living was scarlet: "I know you aren't," she said in a terrible tight voice. "Not even now. Not even when you're in jail for... for stealing. You think everything will come out all right. Every one comes to help you. Even now there's... there's Mr. Fitzgerald—"

"And you," Kellogg added.

"And me. I... might even stand... this... your being a... a... crook—and John Andrew blinked once—but... if you loved me... really did... you wouldn't hurt me so... nor lie to me. And so..."

"Just wait—"

"I have! And hoped! I even thought that I'd be making enough money so that we wouldn't need to worry. I'd have been willing to do it for you, John Andrew. But now..."

"Money hasn't anything to do with it," he said.

"If it had," Anne blazed, shaking his hand off, "do you think I'd have cared for you?"

It seemed to Kellogg that there had grown a bond between them, welded now by Anne's very heat: it was independent of love; reason could not weaken it, nor hate destroy it. Fitzgerald, who, for minutes had heard nothing from either Anne or Kellogg, coughed discreetly and turned around.

"We don't want to rub it in," he said. "If you people have had your say, we'd better run along. I'll tell you how we make out. Kellogg, just as soon as I get a confirmation from San Francisco I'll see if I can't square things here and get you out—"

"We've decided—Mr. Kellogg and I—that I'll give you the money to send," said Anne. They hadn't even spoken of it; after Anne's vehement words neither had spoken a word.

"And I'll give... whoever gets it... the money for the machine—"

"Five thousand?" asked Fitzgerald.

"You leave it to me," the engineer suggested. "As soon as we get an O. K. on the deal I'll use the organization and we'll fix up the check business and then Kellogg can... get out."

"Remember this name and address," John Andrew said; he gave them to the engineer, and then said, "Send this wire to Craig for me. Ask him what is wrong with my check for $4,950; that the bank has refused to honor it. Tell him to deposit that amount... no, to wire me... say $10,000... no—thinking of the venture back of everything—tell him to wire me, care of you, what the trouble has been, and see that the bank wires me the $5,000 now on deposit."

Anne covered her face with her hands.

"Don't," Kellogg pleaded. "Just be patient a little longer."

"I can't," Anne tried to say distinctly, but the words broke. "Why—"

Laundry & Dry Cleaning

why—how—how can you try to keep on fooling me? I know. You can't ever fool me again. You—you never fooled me. I know what you are trying to make me think with that telegram. But you can't. I know better. She let him see her face and, abruptly, stood up. "I—good-bye," he said.

Kellogg tried the finality of the word; he tried to speak but what he did was more automatic, requiring no—more—indeed—thought. He began, worst of all things in the world, to whistle tunelessly, although his face was white and strained as the girl's. Anne threw up her hand, almost as if to slap him across the packed lips; she stared at him and then, abruptly, turned to leave.

None of the three had heard the glass door open. Anne's way was blocked by the blue serge clad deputy who had arrested Kellogg in his room at the Thompsons and by another man John Andrew had never seen. "Just a minute," Blue Serge said, closing the door behind him. "Just a minute, lady."

"She hasn't anything to do with this," John Andrew snapped. "She wishes to get out of here; let her go if you hear! Open the door—"

"Just—minute—"

"The lady came with me," protested Fitzgerald. "I'm from Con—"

"Don't get excited," the deputy said, he stared at Kellogg coolly, from John Andrew's dark blue coat to his brown shoes, as if inventorying every article of attire and registering height, weight and features for the Bertillon cards; then he announced to the man with him, "That's him. I picked him up at the Point. Where he was tried to beat 'em out of their bill, but they ain't pressin' it."

"If you're from the district attorney's office and want to question me," Kellogg broke in, addressing the second man, "what sense is there in forcing the lady to remain here?"

"None, sir; none at all. She may go if she desires," Anne started toward the glass door. Blue Serge opened it as the newcomer said, "Frankly, Mr. Kellogg, I am not from the district attorney's office at all; I represent Mercury Motors here, sir, legally, and... well, on the face of things, and to make a very long story short, I fear that we—that is, my client—owe you an apology—"

"Well," said John Andrew, "you see, Mr. Kellogg, if you are not going, madam, may I offer you a chair?... perhaps we might all sit, eh?... this has evolved into a rather delicate affair, on one side, although I am sure, Mr. Kellogg, that you feel—"

Jubilee's Partner

A Story of Boyhood
Adventure

BY JUDD M. LEWIS

SATURDAY. I was thinking about my grandfather when my ann Jubilee woke up this morning, and how I was going to have to go fishing with him, and then I let Jubilee down and told him he had got to go too, but he only wagged what he had got left of the tail he must have had at one time and looked pleased. A dog is not so very little. I told the bunch while I was milking the damned brute that I was going fishing with my grandfather, and when I went in the house with the milk and Mamma and Youngs and Feeble went in with me they all skunk out through the back way, so that when I went out after breakfast to clean the barn they were all gone.

Just when I started cleaning my grandfather hollered that he was ready, so I got out of cleaning the barn just then and went running. The girls asked if they might go, and my grandfather said certainly. He had a long pair of rubber boots that he let me carry, and when we had walked to the river way out past the farmhouse he said there ought to be something in there and for us to keep away from the water and not talk. He took a little fish pole like a snap out of a cane, and tied a round thing painted white and with hooks all over it to his line, and then he took off the shoes he had on and put on the boots and tied the tops of them to his belt and went down and waded into the water very careful, and the pole a slip and the wooden thing went almost across the river, and it looked like a big fish had been over there waiting for it, for it grabbed it and began to fight, and it took my grandfather quite a while to bring it in. He said it was a big mouthed bass, and he put it on a stringer and let it hang from his belt in the water, while he threw his line in some more. Just then we saw a big crawfish that acted like it was most too cold to travel climbing down the bank, and Feeble grabbed it and reached out from the bank and dropped it into one of my grandfather's boots where it gapped at the top, and it must have taken quite a while to get warmed up but all at once my grandfather gave a jump that landed him in over the tops of his boots, and then he came climbing out and got down and I pulled off his boots and pored the water out of them, and he said the bloody-black-black bass had bit him while his back was turned and it was the first time he ever knew a fish to do that. He didn't wear his boots any more, but he caught three more big fish. I was surprised, he told everyone at home that the fish bit him. I had to clean the stable with a lantern. No chicken-pox yet.

Love's Reawakening

A Wife's Triumph Over Jealousy

BY ABEL CARRISON

Made Success in Quelling Lillian Lillian's question concerning the punishment for taking a bath in a dry man, I took a firm hold of the trembling hands which had caught at my arm.

"Steady!" I whispered. "The punishment for taking a bath in a dry man, I took a firm hold of the trembling hands which had caught at my arm. I'll take you back to Harbrough. Put this on and sit down here a second or two first."

I put her cloak around her, one more concealing the dress she had worn to gladden Robert Sarant's dying eyes, and guided her to a chair. Then I ran down the hall and returned with a glass from which I compelled her to drink a few sips of water.

The Sleeping Patient
"Now," I said when she had stopped trembling, "we will go. You do not need to say anything downstairs. I will do all the talking."

She made no answer and I guessed that she was incapable of speech. But she walked steadily with me down the stairs and stood quietly while I told the nurse who was sitting in the lower hall that we had completed our visit.

"Please, say to Mrs. Cogrore," I said, hurrying Lillian toward the door, "that I shall be back in a little while to see her."

The nurse nodded and the next minute I was outside the door with Lillian, grateful indeed for the crisp winter air which was like a powerful tonic for racked nerves.

"Not a word now," I told her. "I'll answer your question, if you still want me to, later on. Just now, you're going to get back to our room—if you can."

I added the last words beneath my breath, for I did not wish her to know how great was my concern for her. That almost every bit of her nerve strength had been sapped by the ordeal of holding a last fare-well to the man who had loved her so passionately—and so hopelessly—I will know. If I could only get her safely into bed before the inevitable reaction came!

It was a near thing, but victory lay with me. She said nothing more, and her movements were more like those of an automaton than of a living woman as I brought her into the Harbrough home and up the stairs to the room which had been assigned her. With the same passiveness as I undressed her and put her into bed. But she pulled my hand away as I brought her a tray glass of hot milk.

"I couldn't swallow anything," she whispered. "I was miserable for I had put a sedative, provided by Katherine before I started from the farmhouse, into the milk."

"I won't bother you again, all night," I told her as I held the glass against her lips. "But you must take this for me."

She obeyed with a mighty effort, and then lay back upon her pillows, her great eyes staring at me.

"But I can't go to sleep," she said, "even with that stuff I know you must have put in the milk. I can't tell you. I'm letting Robert go into eternity believing a lie, and—Harry—I can't bear to think—"

A New Problem
"Don't think!" I adjured her. "That's just what I'm forbidding you to do. Here! shut your eyes, and let me try the tactics I use with Juniors."

She closed her eyes obediently, and I took a position on the bed close to her and began stroking her forehead, with long even sweeps of my hands, crooning as I did so that staunch stand-by of distracted mothers, the monotonous cadence of "This is the house that Jack built," with all its extra lines. She protested but once, without opening her eyes.

"It's no use, Mader. You're only wasting your strength," but I gave her no answer save the crooning, and the lay still but rigid, every nerve unconsciously rebelling against my efforts to put her to sleep.

At last, however, the sedative got in its work and first one hand and then the other fell to the bed relaxed. I stopped the crooning, listened to her even breathing, satisfied myself that she was at last asleep, and knowing she would not wake until morning, I drew the covers over her, opened the window and picked up my bag, went into the adjoining room where Mary was still reading.

"I think I shall sleep in here if you don't mind, Mader," I said, putting my bag down at the foot of one of the beds. "I've just succeeded in getting Mrs. Underwood to sleep, and I don't want to run the risk of disturbing her."

Mary had looked up from her book and was gazing at me steadily. To my surprise there was distinct hostility in her gaze.

"I suppose you also want to see that I stay in the cell," she said. "What's the big idea of hobbling me, anyway, Auntie Mader?"

Gentlemen:

I drove a Buick for over five years, and when I was in the market for a new car this Spring, I heard of the new Buick product and waited to inspect same on the first day they were on display. Immediately the car took my eye and I knew that anything that the Buick people put out would have to stand up.

I have driven it about six thousand miles since June. I am getting splendid mileage and it is one of the easiest-riding cars that I have ever driven.

For the money, I do not believe that a person can purchase a better looking car. Its performance on a hill is wonderful and the getaway in traffic surpasses anything that I have seen.

Very truly yours,
Raj. F. Shae
